

TRACE SKIN CARE

Q: What exactly is Platelet Rich Plasma, also known as PRP?

A: PRP is a high concentration of platelets surrounded in its own plasma. Platelets play a key role in the regeneration and wound healing process. A small amount of blood is drawn, and after being centrifuged, the red cells are isolated from the PRP. Trace Skin Care founder Tracey Robinson, MSN, WHNP-BC uses the FDA-cleared Eclipse PRP high-concentration system. These systems have been safely used in hundreds of thousands of procedures worldwide. Since the autologous PRP is processed from the patient's own blood, there is virtually no risk of an allergic reaction. Once the PRP is injected into the area of concern, it is activated to release at least 8 essential growth factors and signaling proteins, inducing collagen and proteoglycan synthesis for healthy cell production and repair of damaged tissue. PRP optimizes conditions for healing and the generation of new skin. "I highly recommend it!" says Tracey.

FACIAL REJUVENATION CENTER

Q: I am now in my mid-forties, and as I age, I have noticed my facial features losing shape. What is available to plump up sagging cheeks?

A: A sunken appearance in the cheek area is caused by a loss of fat and changes to the underlying bone structure, which can lead to deep lines around the mouth. When the cheeks start to fall, so does the rest of the face. But Laurie Hays, R.N., Owner and Clinic Director of the Facial Rejuvenation Center, says that filling them conservatively with Voluma® can produce a natural appearance to smooth out the area and restore lost fullness. "People can expect to see lifting of the mid face and replenishment of youthful contours, such as cheekbones, jawlines, chins, and temples," she explains.
